

I am outraged about what I understand to be Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to have its stations air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election.

For the last two years, I have been concerned about the FCC's effort to foster media consolidation and this is a prime example of why I am concerned.

If this is true about Sinclair Broadcasting's intent to preempt regular programming to air a partisan broadcast on Kerry, then I would expect the FCC to investigate the issue and determine whether it violates any existing federal laws or regulations governing campaign coverage, equal time requirements, public trust protections, etc.
